About the FDP

India is in intense need of feminism as it lacks the system to improve the lives of women. We are in 21st Century; still women are forced into the role of caregiver by the cultural norms of Indian society. In present scenario, women are contributing to the development of economy at national and international level both, yet they are not empowered enough to improve their circumstances.

Under right circumstances, women have the ability to move mountains or change the society as a whole. They are acting as catalyst in present scenario, wherein they are performing many roles at a point of time. They are running the country, giving right values to their kids, educating the youth of the nation. Women can be seen as having an equal edge but in what percent? In reality, women are still facing domestic violence, barred from taking decisions on their own and shackled by the social beliefs.

This FDP aims at providing a platform for discussions and lectures from leading academicians, feminist scholars, researchers and activists who have critical insight in this field, which will enable the participants to understand and explore the areas and assist them in solving many issues related to feminism and human rights.

Contents:

1. Spreading the awareness on women laws
2. Helping the participants to explore job relevant technical skills and imparting the same to their students and society at large by encouraging them to become entrepreneurs
3. Understanding globalization and commoditization of women
4. Trafficking of women in India: status and challenges
5. Role of women in media
